One of the actors in the strange scenes described, and now a Minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

ILLUSTRATED WITH PORTRAITS AND WOOD-CUTS,

EXTRACTS FROM OFFICIAL REPORTS: "The mode of operation proposed was to reach a point on the road where they could seize a focomotive and train of cars, and then dush back in the direction of Chattanooga, cutting the telegraph wires and burning the bridges behind them as they advanced, until they reached their own lines."

"The twenty-two capilyes, when secured, were thrust into the negro jail of Chattanooga. They occupied a single room, half under ground, and but thirteen feet square, so that there was not space enough for them all to lis down together, and a part of them were, in consequence, obliged to sleep sitting and leaning against the walls. The only entrance was through a trap-door in the ceiling, that was raised twice a day to let fown their scanty meals, which entrance was through a trap-door in the ceiting, that was raised twice a day to let down their scalely meals, which were lowered in a bucket. They had no other light or ventilation than that which came through two small triples grated windows. They were covered with swarming vermin, and the heat was so oppressive that they were often obliged to strip themselves entirely of their clothes to bear it. Add to this, they were all handcuffed, and, with trace-chains secured around their necks by padlocks, were fastened to each other in companies of twos and threes. Their food, which was doled out to them twice a day, consisted of a little flour wet with water and baked in the form of bread, and spoiled pickled beef. They had no opportunity of procuring supplies from the outside, nor had they any means of doing so,—their pockets having been rifled of their fast cent by the Confederate authorities, prominent in a manner suited to interest and instruct the general mass of readers. It combines accuracy of information and systematic arrangement with brevity and simplicity of treatment. The descriptive portions in the various branches of Natural History are marked by vividness and simplicity; numerous original anecdotes are introduced, illustrative of animal habits and peculiarities, in connection with scientific details, and over 500 illustrations give a life-like aspect to the whole volume and a clear idea of what each creature is where nature placed it. It possesses equal interest for juvenile and for mature readers.
